A one-day workshop on "Skill Development for Economists"

The workshop coordinate by Dr. Venkatappa Naik. The main resource person was Smt. She explained skill Development means developing the skill sets to add value for the organization and for our own career development. Continuously learning and developing one's skills requires identifying the skills needed and then successfully seeking out trainings or on-the-job opportunities for developing those skills.

She thoughted (70-20-10 rule) 70% of your development should come from on-the-job activities and action learning. This can include development experiences like managing a project, serving on a cross-functional team, taking on a new task, job shadowing, job rotation, etc. 20% of your development should come from interactions with others. This includes having a mentor, being a mentor, coaching, participating in communities of practice, serving as a leader in a staff organization, etc. 10% of your development should come from training, including classes, seminars, webinars, podcasts, conferences, etc.
